

The Private Devotions and Manual for the Sick of Launcelot Andrews (Classic Reprint)

It was at first the design of the translator to introduce the subject of his present labours with a minute inquiry into the life and character of that venerable being, the most beautiful of whose numerous productions he has here endeavoured to place in such a light, as should entitle them to more general acquaintance than heretofore. From the performance of this intention he has been withheld by the unexpected bulk to which the volume has extended, through the addition, not originally contemplated, of the Manual for the Sick, The necessity of this (mission he has now the less reason to regret, since, in addition to the copious Memoir introduced by the Rev. S. H. Cassan into his Lives of the Bishops of Winchester, the valuable Life of Andrews, by his Friend and Antiquarian, Henry Isaacson, first published in 1650, incorporated the year following into Fuller's A Breviary, and reprinted by John Trotter Brockett, Esq. of Newcastle, in 1817, has been lately edited with much diligence by the Rev. Stephen Isaacson, a lineal descendant of the writer. Yet something it will be necessary to premise on this head, not merely to gratify the readers inquisitiveness as to the history of the author and his work, but because many allusions occur throughout the latter, wholly inexplicable without a reference to the corresponding passages in the former. Lancelot Andrews was born in the year 1555, in the parish of All-Hallows Barking, London. His father, who was master of Trinity House, and descended from an ancient and religious family in Suffolk, left his son in circumstances of respectability and comfort. The first rudiments of his education he received under Mr. Ward, in the Coopers Free-School, at Ratcliffe; from whence he was removed to Merchant Tailors, at that time under the care of the celebrated Richard Mulcaster. Here his proficiency in the learned languages (Typographical errors
